and true thing I believe I have ever read on modern young readers. I started making paragraphs but soon gave it up as every sentence is a gem, "a clear gem-like flame" of understanding and clarity of expression — which my own enthusiasm obviously makes impossible!

Please tell her for me that I was delighted by it. Her own childhood so parallels my own, and her feelings about books and young people are so much like mine, that I feel an especial gratitude towards her for writing just what I would have liked to have written.

I wish "Keep the Bough Green" could be reprinted in every teachers' and librarians' journal in the country — even in the Reader's Digest, simply because it reaches such a wide audience. It says everything that any parent, teacher, or librarian needs to know, and should be required reading for any would-be writer of children's books.

Goodnight Moon

Dear Editor,

For several years I have "sat on" this anecdote, not knowing just how to share it with other lovers of children and children's books. Imagine! And I'm on my second year of the HORN BOOK, too!

Carol had outgrown Goodnight Moon and several other books by the same author, but still remembered them with love. On a trip to the U. S. Capitol with visiting relatives, she entered a room with statues and was told they were statues of Famous Women in the United States.

"Oh, good!" she exclaimed with a wide, gap-toothed smile. "Which one is Margaret Wise Brown!"
